How much can I save using Expense Summary '99?

Your savings will vary based on several factors:

- Your flight history (Number of layovers, layover cities & length of stay)
- How you file your taxes (whether you file a joint or single return, etc.)
- Your individual tax bracket
- Whether or not your travel expenses exceed 2% of your Adjusted Gross Income (AGI). In addition to travel expenses, flight attendants can also deduct uniform fees, dry cleaning, work shoes etc. to reach the 2% AGI threshold.

Do I need to save receipts?

No! Expense Summary '99 uses the IRS standard (as opposed to actual) expense method, so no receipts are required. Expense Summary '99 documents all information required by the IRS to support claimed expenses.

Delta reimburses me a per diem amount -- how does this method work?

Delta pays you a flat per diem rate for each hour you are away from base (TAFB). The amount of the Delta per diem reimbursement is usually less than the actual per-city allowance established by the IRS. Therefore, you may claim the difference between what the IRS allows and what Delta reimburses you as an additional travel-expense deduction. This is what Expense Summary '99 does for you.

Why is it free to Delta flight attendants?

We want you to experience the benefits of Expense Summary '99 and Flight Log '99 this year. Talk about it with your fellow crewmembers and share it with your tax advisor. In mid-February, 2001, Flightline will offer Expense Summary 2000 in time for your tax filing next year, at a cost of only $49.95.

Is Expense Summary '99 also available to Delta pilots at no charge?

Unfortunately, no. Capturing pilot travel data is more much more difficult. Because it is an expensive, manual process the same offer cannot be extended to pilots at this time. However, pilots can order and pay for Expense Summary '99 by calling Flightline at 800-659-9859.
